PROGRAM OVERVIEW:

The post-baccalaureate program in Reading and Literacy prepares candidates to work as Reading Specialists for all grade levels by:

- Enabling students to develop a philosophy of "emergent literacy" as it relates to current trends in the field of reading and language development.
- Providing students knowledge of significant theories, practices, and programs for developing skills and reading comprehension.
- Providing students with multiple opportunities for practicum experiences to assess, diagnose, and provide remedial strategies for students who may be experiencing reading/language difficulties.
- Providing students with appropriate methods of administering reading programs for K-12 grade levels, including curriculum planning, staff development, and selection of materials.
- Providing opportunities for students to pursue research on the topic of authentic assessment, literacy, and the integration of the language arts.
- Providing students with opportunities to design instructional strategies to meet the needs of reading disabled youngsters.
- Modeling effective ways of staff supervision, teacher selection, and curriculum development through course content, observation, and practicum experience.
